Misophonia is a disorder in which certain sounds trigger emotional or physiological responses that some might perceive as unreasonable given the circumstance. It is described as “a sound that drives you crazy” by sufferers of misophonia. Individuals with misophonia often report they are triggered by oral sounds such as the noise someone makes when they eat, breathe, or even chew. Some other unbearable sounds are keyboard or finger tapping or the sound of windshield wipers. The disorder appears to range from mild to severe. Individuals report a range of physiologic and emotional responses, with accompanying cognitions. If you have a mild reaction, you might feel anxious, uncomfortable and the urge to flee. If your response is more severe, the sound in question might cause anger, panic, fear and emotional distress. The disorder can put a cramp in your social life. Those with the misophonia have been known to develop anticipatory anxiety when going into situations where trigger sounds may be present. You might avoid restaurants or eat separately from your spouse, family, or roommates.

11. We can understand from the passage that misophonia -----.

- A) is a disorder that triggers only physiological responses
